Mr. Sampson, as a Volunteer Fire-Board possesses powers of debate as well as man of many years' standing, has had a good of wrangling. When a committee meets to draw up a report it often happens that their discussion becomes of a desultory in Korea, Mr. Colin M. Ford, H.M.'s Consulcharacter, difficult points are slurred over, and the final report is more or less indefinite. When, however, it is necessary to prepare precise rules or regulations the attention becomes more directly focused, and, as Mr. EDE said, if it is found-one draft won't work they have to go on trying until they get one that will. The principle enunciated by Mr. EDE was, however, hardly applicable to the particular instance before the Board. Before proceeding to frame by-laws it is necessary to ascertain what it is that has to be dealt with. Even the existence of overcrowding seems to be to some extent in dispute, and granting its existence, there is no precise information as to the districts in which it prevails and no general agreement as to the measures by which it might be suppressed. Dr. CANTLIE brought before the Board the distinction between surface crowding and overcrowding in houses, which are two very different things. If an acre occupied by houses of two storeys affords reasonable Cockchafer's dock was not ready, and she also accommodation for one thousand persons, the same space covered with fourstoreyed houses would reasonably accommodate two thousand; the surface crowding would be greater, but the amount of cubic space allowed to each individual in Justice Chitty's decision in Re Inco Hall Relthe respective houses would remain the same. He stated, however, one of the reasons why these districts are not in favour with the Chinese population, namely, that it is believed there the centre of the town. It appears steps are being taken to remove this objection by the better lighting of the streets, and at Kennedytown a new police station has been established. As to means of communication, Mr launches would be of even more advantage than a trainway. This probably was a passing faccy of the speaker's, for a very little the thermometer being down to 30 deg. consideration would show that launches could not possibly offer the same facilities as tram. A person cannot jump on or off a launch at any point as he can off a train, and if the launch had many stopping places the time occupied between the extreme points would probably be equal to or in excess of that be expected to arrive here. The new steamer occurred by the other means of conveyance, The Surveyor-General, however, held out the hope that the Praya will be extended and the tramway laid within five years. When that is accomplished overcrowding will soon disappear. Something may perhaps be done in the meantime to reduce the evil, if it is found to exist to the extent supposed, but being of their well-known design. IN ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. HO CHUN LUN v. HO LAI SHI.

His Lordship delivered the following judgment in this case on behalf of himself and of the Chief Justice:— This is an administration suit, and the matter comes into Court from Chambers An applica-

The answer alleges that the defendant under the will took an absolute interest and that there is no trust, and in paragraph 4 the answer sets out that the will was drawn up by an English lergyman who was not skilled in will making. and that it was the intention of the testator to give an absolute interest to the defendant. Now am clearly of opinion that no such evidence can be given to explain the will, and that it cannot be pleaded. In the argument it was stated that the answer did not intend to set up a Chinese domicile in the testator, and if it does not the whole of the 4th paragraph should be struck out as being evidence and irrelevant. ## CHAPTER XXXIX.

THE COLONEL GOES TO SLEEP. The condition of mind which could induce a peaceable christian-natured individual who had moreover in the course of his career been mixed up with enough bloodshed to have acquired a thorough horror of it, to offer to fight a duel is difficult to picture. Yet this condition had been reached by Harold Quaritch. 🐣

Edward Cossey had wisely enough declined to entertain the idea, but the Colonel had been perfootly in earnest about it. Odd as it may appear | ed by the mysterious letters A.B.C. in the latter end of this nin-teenth century. the same upon others.

But Cossey utterly declined to fight. As he said, he had had enough of being shot, and so there was an end of it. Indeed, in after days the Colonel frequently looked back upon this episode in his career with shame not unminuled with amusement, reflecting when he did so on

Well, there was nothing more to be done. He might, it is true, have seen Ida, and working tried to persuade her to out the knot by marrying him off-hand. Perhaps he would have succeeded, for in such affairs women are apt to find the arguments advanced by their lovers weighty and well worthy of consideration. But he was not the man to adopt such a course. He did the only thing that he could do-answered her letter by mying that what must be must be. To begin with, he could be trusted to hold his tengue, and the episode of the production of the real Mrs. Quest had taught the Colonel that George was a person of no common powers. He could think and he could act also. He threw on his coat, extinguished the large stable lantern, and having passed out, looked the door of the summer-house, and started down the mount at a trot. The wind had risen steadily during his hours of work, and was now blowing a furious gale. It was about a quarter to four in the morning and the stars shone brightly in the hard clean blown sky. By their light and that of the waning moon he struggled on in the der one of the oaks he heard a mighty crack overhead; and guessing what it was ran like a hare. He was none too soon. A circular gust of more than usual fierceness had twisted the top right out of the great tree, and down it came made his blood turn cold. After this escape he avoided the neighbourhood of the grosning trees. George lived in a neat little farmhouse about a quarter of a mile away. There was a short out to it across the fields, and this he took, breathswept, and reared, and howled in its splendid might as it came leaping across the ocean from its birthplace in the distances of air. Even the stiff hawthorn fences bowed before its breath.

rod beneath the first rush of a salmon. Excited as he was, the immensity and granhad he felt so far apart from man and so near to that dread Spirit round Whose feet millions of rolling worlds rush on for ever, at Whose word they are, endure, and are not.

He struggled on until at last he reached the windows a light was burning. No doubt its occupants found it impossible to sleep in that wild gale. The next thing to consider was how to make himself heard. To knock at the door would be useless in that turmoil. There was only one thing to be done—throw stones at the window. He found a good-sized pebble, and standing underneath, threw it with such goodwill that it went right through the glass, light George's sleeping nose, and nearly frightening that good woman, whose nerves were already shaken by the gale, into a fit. Next minute a red nightcap appeared at the window.

"George," roared the Colonel, in a lull of the "Who's there?" came the faint answer. "Me-Colonel Quaritch. Come down. want to speak to you.' The head was withdrawn, and a couple of minutes afterwards Harold saw the front door begin to open slowly. He waited till there was fair way to find it." George took another step back, remembering the tales that Mrs. Jobson had teld, and not being by any means sure that the Colonel was not in a dangerous condition of lanacy. "Give me a glass of something to drink, water or milk, and I'll tell you I've been dig ging all night, and my throat's like a limekilm.

"Digging, why, where?" "Where? In Dead Man's Mount." "In Dead Man's Mount?" said George Well, blow me, if that ain't a funny place to dig at on a night like this," and too amazed to say anything more, he went off to get the milk. Harold drank three glasses without stopping, and then sat down to tell as much of his moving tale as he thought desirable.
